Ypsi notes new political era

By SARA COPPERNOLL
Press Staff Writer

No matter where they were or who they were with, many voters in Ypsilanti said they will never forget the moment they heard Bill Clinton was going to be the next president of the United States.

Marilin Kelley was at U.S. Rep. William Ford's victory party at the Huron Golf Club when she heard Clinton was elected. "I cried; I was so excited," Kelley said.

Kelley had been waiting for that day a long time. During her vacation this summer, Kelley sent Clinton a postcard from the Mission Nombre De Dios church in St. Augustine, Fla. "It was the one thing I could do to send him my prayers."

She couldn't believe it when he sent her a return postcard thanking her for her support. It was signed simply — "Bill."

Kelley did not realize how much her life was about to change when she went to the Democratic headquarters in Ypsilanti to volunteer her time, she said. "It was an experience I'll never forget."

Kelley suffers from an occupational illness and needs to be on an oxygen machine part of the time, she said. It was her doctor who encouraged her to do some volunteer work.

When Clinton stayed at the Radisson on the Lake before the third and final presidential debate in East Lansing, Kelley collected numerous souvenirs with Clinton's signature while working as a volunteer.

"Every time I saw him, I had him sign something different," she said.

At one point, Kelley did not have anything handy while Clinton walked through the Radisson lobby, so she asked him to sign the name tag she was wearing.

Former Ypsilanti Township Trustee Brenda Stumbo, 30, was at the United Auto Workers Local 1776 Hall waiting for the local election results. "I was, of course, glued to the TV," she said. Stumbo was unopposed in her bid for clerk Tuesday.

Stumbo said she is confident in what Clinton can do and is looking forward to the next four years. "He has an agenda; we just have to all get behind him and work together."

Stumbo, who works at the Radisson, also volunteered time to help with Clinton's campaign. "We worked hard and it paid off," she said.

She compared Clinton to John F. Kennedy. "People talk about how incredible Kennedy was. I don't remember Kennedy. That's how Clinton is to me," she said.

Russell Loesell, 70, was around for Kennedy. He's voted in every presidential election since he was 18, and in every one of those elections he voted Republican. But not this one.

Loesell voted for a Democratic candidate Tuesday for the first time in his life.

He watched Clinton's acceptance speech on his living room television. "I was glad I waited up, I almost went to bed on him because it took so long."

Shakeup: Kosteva out, Whyman in

Democrats and Republicans are looking forward to the challenges of a new term despite a change in the balance of power in the House of Representatives.

Republican challenger Deborah Whyman apparently defeated incumbent Rep. James Kosteva, D-Canton Township, for the 21st District race.

He was but one of several Democrats defeated in re-election bids across Michigan.

Whyman believes the Republican majority in the House of Representatives will provide numerous opportunities for change.

"Some of the gridlock will disappear from the House. We're going to see the size of government change. We're going to see some changes in the area of welfare," said Whyman.

Many bills for property tax reduction and school finance reform were held up in the House and forced the ballot issues Proposals A and C, Whyman said.

Re-elected Rep. Kirk Profit, D-Ypsilanti Township, also is looking towards the challenges and says Republicans and Democrats must put the election behind them.

"It is a real interesting circumstance at this point. They are still counting the votes and it (could) be a split house or minority with 54 (Democratic seats) to 56 (Republican) seats."

"This is a new opportunity for change. There are no ex-

President-elect Bill Clinton began making transition plans Wednesday.

Clinton makes economy top priority

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Bill Clinton appealed to foreign leaders Wednesday to cooperate with George Bush during the president's final two months in office, then turned his attention to planning the Democrats' takeover of the White House.

Clinton said the "hard and vital task" of reviving the U.S. economy would be his top domestic priority. "The task has already begun," the president-elect declared on the first day after his electoral landslide.

The Democrat sought to quiet jittery financial markets with a promise that "we understand the need to pursue stability even as we pursue new growth." Clinton said his changes "will strengthen America's market systems, not weaken them."

With Vice President-elect Al Gore at his side, Clinton sought to reassure world leaders there would be a smooth transition of power and no disruption of American foreign policy.

Clinton said he would continue Bush's effort to broker Middle East peace and negotiate a START II arms treaty with Russia.

"America has only one president at a time," Clinton said, speaking outside the Arkansas governor's mansion. "America's foreign policy remains solely in his hands."

Clinton told ABC's Ted Koppel that several world leaders called while he slept on Wednesday. He did not identify them, but said he hoped to return the calls on Thursday.

"I'm anxious to have some conversations," he said.

As world leaders offered congratulations, and tried to assess any shifts Clinton would make in foreign policy, the president-elect used his first big step on the world stage to urge continuity.

"The greatest gesture of goodwill that any nation can make toward me during this period is to continue full cooperation with our one president, George Bush," Clinton said. "The greatest mistake any adversary could make would be to doubt America's resolve during this transition."

Later, Clinton met into the evening with his six-member transition team and other aides at the Arkansas governor's mansion to discuss policy and personnel decisions. Initial announcements were likely by the end of the week, aides said.

Hunter withdrew, but wins YDL board seat

By RAYMOND McMILLAN
Press Staff Writer

Despite dropping out of the race, the residents of Ypsilanti and Ypsilanti Township have elected Addie Johnson Hunter along with incumbents Helen Vick and Leah Biggs to the Ypsilanti District Library Board.

Hunter received 6,506 votes while Vick received 7,741 votes and 6,907 votes were cast for Leah Biggs, who served as board secretary.

Three positions were open on the board, which consists of seven members who serve four-year terms. The board makes policy decisions that the library staff implements.

Hunter withdrew from the race for personal reasons but remained on the ballot according to election regulations.

A person can't withdraw voluntarily from the election unless they die or move away from the area, said Deputy City Clerk Dan Byrne.

"(Hunter) has a choice of taking her oath and resigning from the position or refusing to take her oath," he said.

Other candidates for the positions were incumbent Frank Reaume with 5,702 votes and Loren Mendelsohn with 6,375 votes.

Reaume served on the appointed library board, before state law allowed for autonomous library boards with elected trustees.

High voter turnout slows ballot count

By JOHN MULCAHY
Press Staff Writer

A 66-percent voter turnout in Washtenaw County kept harried election workers busy Tuesday, and kept the public waiting for results, election officials said.

The last ballots to arrive didn't reach the county courthouse in Ann Arbor until 5:45 a.m. Wednesday, County Clerk Peggy Haines said. Final results were available at 7 a.m.

Several municipalities, including the city of Ypsilanti, and Ypsilanti, Superior and Northfield townships were especially late counting their ballots or getting them to the county building.

"It was just a little bit overwhelming," said Ypsilanti Township Clerk Ethel Howard. The last of 19 precincts in the township didn't bring its ballots to the Civic Center until after 3 a.m.

"We haven't dealt with a large, large turnout like that ... " Howard said.

Ypsilanti Township counts its punch-card ballots at the Civic Center, after which they still have to be delivered to the county building.

Superior Township Clerk Vivian Ellsworth said the heavy turnout meant election workers didn't have a chance to process absentee ballots early.

"Usually they do that during the day," Ellsworth said.

Superior delivered its ballots to the county at about 2:45 a.m., she said. She said the last voters in the township cast their ballots after 9 p.m.

In Northfield Township, Deputy Clerk Rosemary Donner said a sticker write-in campaign and the fact that some voters couldn't vote on the Washtenaw Community College questions accounted for the township taking its ballots to the county building at 3 a.m.

The city of Ypsilanti, which uses voting machines, was one of the latest to arrive, deliver-

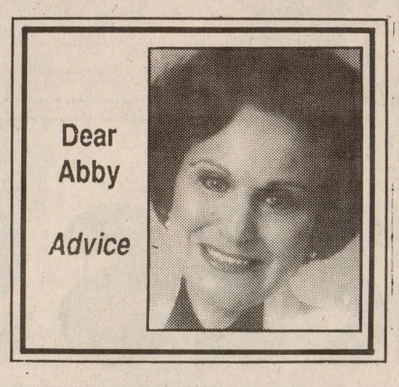
Even raunchy speech is worthy of protection



DEAR ABBY: I have no opinion about foul language on television because I no longer watch television. Withdrawal was painful, but after a year or two, it became a liberating experience.

As for foul language in movies and other media outlets: Art imitates life. There are rude and crude people among us, and a writer or director must have the freedom to depict them.

Moreover, the only alternative to foul language is censorship. Movies are rated; if foul language is a problem for someone, that person should see only G-rated movies. The ratings do provide a clue to the content; and reviews often go beyond this, with such a line as, "... rated R for violence and nudity."

Unrestricted freedom of speech is important. In George Orwell's "1984," he depicts a society where a new language was implemented specifically for the purpose of restricting the range of ideas that could be expressed, along with active programs to restrict thought by other means.

Movies, other media outlets, and especially rock and rap lyricists are testing the limits of freedom of speech daily.

While we may occasionally feel that freedom of speech is carried to extremes in the United States, we must realize also that there are some people trying to curtail our liberties, and we must stand up to them.

— DOUGLAS CAMPBELL, CLINTONVILLE, OHIO

DEAR DOUGLAS: You make some excellent points. If you don't like what you hear on TV and radio, you can always turn them off — or walk out of a movie. However, freedom of speech is still protected under the Bill of Rights.

Last May, a reader complained in my column about foul language in some of our "best" movies and TV shows. I told her that I agreed, and asked my readers to let me know how they felt about it.

At last count, 67,783 readers felt many movies and TV shows today insult our values, intelligence and morals. Only 213 readers disagreed.

Perhaps the key word here should be "responsibility." Let's hear it from Phil Boatwright, who reviews films for a living:

DEAR ABBY: I'm afraid I'm a perfect example of why Americans put up with obscenity in films and on TV. I've had your address, but I have continued to put off writing. We all just get too busy!

I would encourage others of like mind to respond to Hollywood's disregard for morality. Profane language, exploitative sex and extreme violence seem to be in almost every film released these days. Surely it is the right of filmmakers to show such material, but Hollywood should exercise more responsibility.

Parents also need to show responsibility and concern. I review films for a living, and I can't tell you how often I see kids in PG-13 and R-rated films. Their heads are not only filled with crudity, but with cynicism, racism and a disregard for life.

If we are concerned about saving Mother Earth, shouldn't we also be concerned with nourishing the spirit of man?

— PHIL BOATWRIGHT, THOUSAND OAKS, CALIF.

Harden plays Ava Gardner in 'Sinatra'

Marcia Gay Harden, who is playing the late Ava Gardner in an upcoming television mini-series about Frank Sinatra, says the sultry actress who was the crooner's second wife was "the love of Frank's life."

"They went over the top with each other," she said in a recent interview. "You know, shooting up lampposts in Palm Springs, that sort of thing. They fought so much, they eventually fought their way out of love."

Sinatra and Gardner were married in 1951 and divorced in 1957. Gardner died in 1990.

Harden, 33, who got her big break in the film "Miller's Crossing," said she was worried at first about playing the Gardner role because of the late actress' flamboyance and her legendary beauty. "They ended up doing a lot of makeup work on me," she said. "For me, it became a matter of finding her essence — that raw, gutsy power she had."

Harden said of her own performance in "Sinatra," scheduled for broadcast Sunday and Tuesday on CBS: "Sometimes I thought, 'Oh, Marcia, this is just extraordinarily bad acting on your part — all this breathy, nostril-flaring stuff you're doing.' But at times I really got caught up in her and the story and believed it all."

Actor has high regard for new film

Andy Garcia has high regard for his new film, "Jennifer 8," and makes no apologies for his current release, "Hero," which never developed into a hit.

Garcia, 36, stars in "Jennifer 8" as a cop who quits mean L.A. for Northern California only to get caught up in a serial murder.

"The script was incredibly precise and well-written and loaded with contradictions and complexities and demons for the protagonist to overcome," Garcia said of "Jennifer 8," which opens Friday.

Meanwhile, "Hero," with Dustin Hoffman and Geena Davis, has not done well at the box office.

"I think it's doing well enough," Garcia said in a recent interview. "Commercially, you're setting yourself up, getting greedy if you want to just take everything home for yourself. ... I have no disappointments about that; I would've been disappointed if we had made a bad film or one that was somehow destroyed in order to aspire to be commercial. It's doing well enough, for me."

Cyrus responds to Reeves' suit

Singer Billy Ray Cyrus says Grand Ole Opry performer Del Reeves took advantage of him by signing him to a contract that would have cost almost all his earnings.

Cyrus' comments came in a response filed in Davidson County Chancery Court to a lawsuit Reeves and his wife, Ellen, filed in September.

The singer, who topped both the pop and country charts this year with his debut album "Some Gave All," said in court documents that Reeves talked him into signing a record production agreement in 1988.

The deal involved Cyrus paying 8 percent of "the suggested retail list price of all records sold" plus 15 percent of his gross earnings if Reeves got Cyrus a recording contract, Cyrus said.

The longtime Opry performer charges that he was a key in Cyrus signing a contract with Mercury/Polygram Records.

Students at Milan High School will have a half-day of classes Friday, while teachers gather grades for the nine-week marking period.

Report cards will be distributed next week at parent-teacher conferences Wednesday and next Thursday, or mailed to parents unable to attend conferences.

Classes will not be held Nov. 16 for students in Milan Area Schools. Students should report to school as scheduled Nov. 17.

The Milan Public Library, 151 Wabash, will hold a preschool story hour at 10 a.m. on Fridays, Nov. 13 and 20. The latter will include Thanksgiving stories.

For information, contact the Milan Public Library at 439-1240.

In other library news, Director Andrea Rumps is putting together information for the library's annual anthology of creative writing, "Here Comes ...".

Let your creative juices flow now so when the information is complete, your entry will be ready.

The anthology has included, and is open to original works of prose, poetry, art (drawings), songs, drama, essays, etc.

When more information is available you'll find it here.

As we approach winter it is important to remember to conserve energy.

Residents of Augusta Township are working hard to keep waste at a minimum and are conserving and recycling as much as possible.

The latest recycling effort surrounds fallen leaves and is an attempt to deter residents from burning leaves.

From 9 a.m. to dusk on Saturdays and Sundays until Nov. 22, homeowners can bag their leaves and drop them off at one of three sites where they will be transported and used as mulch on the farm of Jerome Blaszak.

The locations are:

- Augusta Township Hall parking lot, 8021 Talladay Road
- Willis Hardware, 10124 Willis Road, Willis
- Jerome Blaszak's farm, 11361 Bunton Road.

Leaves should be placed in the wagons at the sites and must be left in trash bags, not dumped loose into the wagons.

Democrats dominate redrawn county board

By JOHN MULCAHY
Press Staff Writer

Democrats will have an 11-to-4 majority when the expanded Washtenaw County Board of Commissioners convenes in January. The present board has only nine districts.

Ironically, Democrats sued last year to throw out the commission boundaries, drawn by Republicans, saying the boundary lines gave Republicans an unfair advantage.

Voters in the 7th District turned out eight-year incumbent Republican Roy Smith Tuesday, electing instead Democratic newcomer Judith Carol Walter by a vote of 4,423-4,047 in unofficial returns.

Walter waged an aggressive campaign over an environmental-ordinance vote by Smith in September and a racially offensive remark he made in public last year.

Smith apologized for the remark last year.

The 7th District includes parts of Ypsilanti, Pittsfield and York townships.

In the 2nd District, Democrat Alma Smith defeated Republican William Young 4,704-3,906. Both were running in their first county board race.

Smith, an aide to state Sen. Lana Pollack, D-Ann Arbor, is a member of the South Lyon Board of Education. Young owns his own plastic recycling business and is a member of the University of Detroit-Mercy Board of Trustees.

Both stressed job creation and social service delivery in their campaigns.

The 2nd District includes Superior, Salem and Northfield townships.

In the 14th District, incumbent Democrat Mary Egnor beat Republican challenger Robert Oliver 4,050-2,081.

Oliver directs media services for Ypsilanti Public Schools. The 14th District includes parts of northwest and eastern Ypsilanti and Ypsilanti Township.

In the 6th District, incumbent Republican Raymond Schultz beat Democratic challenger Gita Posselt 4,608-3,794.

Both candidates focused their campaigns on opposition to the proposed Envotech hazardous-waste incinerator and landfill in Augusta Township.

The 6th District includes Milan, Augusta Township, the southern part of Ypsilanti Township and half of York Township.

Three incumbents out, Democrats take over

AUGUSTA TWP. — After a new Board of Trustees was swept into power Tuesday, the losers in the election set their differences aside and offered their hope for the township's future, except Supervisor Charles Smith who displayed hostility at winner Bill Gilless at the board's last meeting Wednesday.

Clerk Joanne Ladd and Treasurer Leonard Burrell were ousted from their positions during the largest voter turn-out in Augusta's history.

All of the officers ran four years ago on the premise that they would aggressively fight to stop the proposed hazardous waste incinerator and landfill project.

But their opponents — who banded together as the "Augusta New Leadership Team" — said they weren't attending to the other concerns of the community.

Smith, who served for only one term, denied that was true at Wednesday's Board of Trustees work session by placing the drawers of a filing cabinet on the table and naming the issues he has worked on and kept files of.

"Mr. Gilless, specifically, if I am a one issue candidate concerned only with the landfill ...," said Smith who proceeded to list at least 10 items he had files on.

"Now I don't know what you told your constituents when you were out ...," Smith said to Gilless. "I assume you told them I was a one issue candidate. You either lied or you were badly mistaken. You appeared here on the scene six months ago and that was the first I knew of any of your involvement in this community. And sir, you are badly mistaken."

Smith did however congratulate Gilless on his win saying, "I do congratulate you in that you were elected but the process that you got you there, I don't have anything left to say in this matter."

Gilless, who was at Wednesday's work session, said, "I never addressed you basically as far as what you do. I'm not going to get into a debate here at a township meeting."

"The Democrats got in and already I am unemployed. I hope the best for the new board, particularly for the township. That's been our intent for the past four years and I think we've done that," said Smith, who, of all the Republican officers, took the largest margin of defeat when Democrat Gilless overshadowed him by 221 votes.

After 16 years as clerk, Ladd lost by less than one percent of the vote when returns put Democrat Carol Kovalak into office with 16 more votes. Ladd said she hadn't made a firm decision whether she'd ask for a re-count on the vote, but more than likely, she said she wouldn't.

"Fate has said that this is the way that it's going to be, and I guess that's the way it's going to be," Ladd said.

She wished the new Board of Trustees luck during their administration and said she hoped they would find the means to stopping Envotech from siting the hazardous waste facility.

"If they can find the answer, I hope to goodness they can," she said.

Burrell, who served for the last eight years, was surpassed by Democrat Sue Wilson by 73 votes.

"The people voted me out, what can I say? I lost by a little less than 100 votes. I've done a good job for the township, I'm not ashamed of anything that I've done. I've enjoyed the work," said Burrell who congratulated the new board members Wednesday night.

Incumbent Democrat trustees Hans Posselt and Judy Shemwell were easily re-elected: they were the two top vote-getters with 1,290 and 1,186 votes, respectively.

Democrats Donna Ramsey and Zack Conley will take the two new seats on the board that expanded from a five-member to a seven-member board because Augusta became a charter township in 1990.

Shemwell said she felt bad because the officers had done their best to serve the community.

As for the new board, she said, "I guess we're going to have to all work together ... I know some of them are really good people."

Mom says runaway broke into home

After running away from home, an Ypsilanti teen reportedly returned to break into his mother's house in the 500 block of Madison Avenue, damaging a $50 security lock, said Ypsilanti Police Department officers.

The teen's mother, 31, said the teen ran away from home two weeks ago over a dispute about whether the boy should be allowed to stay in the house alone, police said. The woman said she had not seen her son since, but he broke into the house Monday while she was at work.

The woman told police she is tired of the teen's behavior and wants to report him as a runaway juvenile.

Police recover body of drowned youth

By RAYMOND McMILLAN
Press Staff Writer

VAN BUREN TWP. — Township public safety officers recovered the body of drowning victim Daniel Jahr Tuesday afternoon during a search of Belleville Lake.

"At about 3:40 p.m., we found Jahr," said Mark Perkins, director of the township's Department of Public Safety. "We've been out on the lake every day and doing a sweep. He was found on the surface of the water."

Perkins said Jahr was found near the state Department of Natural Resources boat launch, east of where he and David Ban went into Belleville Lake.

Jahr, 17, of Van Buren and Ban, 19, of Sumpter Township, went out on Belleville Lake at about 4:30 a.m. Oct. 17 in a 14- to 16-foot aluminum canoe. They were reported missing at 6:30 a.m. when they didn't return to Jahr's home.

Ban was found at 8 a.m. but divers couldn't find Jahr. A continuous day-to-day search was conducted for him.

The search included divers from the Wayne County Sheriff's Department and the Michigan State Police. Local boat owners and officers from surrounding communities also voluteered to assist in the search.

A memorial service was held for Jahr Oct. 22 at the David C. Brown Funeral Home in Belleville.

Clinton

ban League director Vernon Jordan are some of the most widely mentioned names.

Aides said picking a White House chief of staff was also high on Clinton's list, because many of the other decisions will fall from there. In weeks past, Kantor had been often listed for that post, too, but one senior Clinton source said Kantor was not as high on the list as he once was.

In addition, Clinton was expected to make up his mind soon about when the resign his governor's post. Aides expect Clinton to stay in Little Rock —conducting most of the transition from there rather than an office in Washington — until at least year's end.

Clinton's itinerary for the next few days consists of, "meet, talk, get his voice back, think, return phone calls," said communications director George Stephanopoulos.

While Clinton set about the business of assuming power, members of his campaign's high command took to the lectern one by one at a midday briefing to lay out what in the end was a winning strategy for breaking the "Republican coalition" that held a 12-year lock on the White House.

Clinton's address came after he walked out of the mansion with Gore. Their wives, Hillary and Tipper, followed them out a few minutes later and stayed in the background. During his comments, the mansion cat — Socks, who is black with white feet — scampered behind him.

Clinton laid out a brief sketch of his agenda on domestic and international fronts.

"It will not be easy but we will spare no effort to restore jobs, growth and income to the American people," Clinton said.

As for foreign affairs, Clinton said he wanted to make progress in global trade talks, assist Russia and other former Soviet republics in their transition to democracy and deliver aid to Somalia's famine victims.

He started his first day as president-elect with a morning stroll with his wife.

At the midday briefing, Clinton's aides offered several explanations for how the Arkansas governor — written off several times earlier in the year — pulled off the win:

■ Pollster Stanley Greenberg said Clinton made inroads with suburban middle class residents who'd voted for Ronald Reagan.

■ Clinton stayed on the economic message. "He did not give the same stump speech everyday, but he gave the same message," said strategist Paul Begala.

■ Unorthodox advertising decisions to save money and not go on the air in big states like California, since Clinton already had a lead there. "We left them unprotected," said media aide Mandy Grunwald. That gave the campaign more money for battleground states.

■ Making headway in the West and South. "We didn't find the key to the electoral lock, we just picked it," said strategist James Carville.

■ Clinton the candidate, as opposed to his message. Clinton's theme that it's "time for a change is hardly new," Carville said.

ing its ballot counts to the county at about 4:30 a.m.

City Clerk Robert Slone said the holdup stemmed from illness and a family death among absentee voter board members.

"We were short of people," Slone said.

Turnout in the city was about 62 percent, the highest Slone could remember since 1976, but slightly behind the county figure.

Unlike other places in the county, there were few voters left in line when the city polls closed, Slone said. He said the city added nine voting machines for the election.

Haines, who was embarrassed this summer by computer merging problems and a miscount in the primary election, said operations at the county went much better Tuesday.

"As far as I'm concerned, the election worked very well," she said.

Haines also blamed the large turnout for the lateness of some returns.

Surplus food distribution begins today

Federal surplus food will be distributed in Ypsilanti, Superior and Augusta townships today and Friday by the Washtenaw County Human Services Department.

For residents living east of Prospect, butter and peanut butter will be given away at the Superior Township Fire Station at Harris and MacArthur from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. today and 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Friday.

For residents living west of Prospect food will be distributed from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. today and 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Friday at Parkridge Community Center, 591 Armstrong Drive.

In Augusta Township, the distribution will be from noon to 3 p.m. or until supply runs out today at Township Hall, 8021 Talladay for township residents only.

Those who want food must bring documented proof of low-income status, such as an ADC letter, paycheck stub or letter from an employer.

Food recipients should bring paper bags to carry food.

For information, call the food hotline at 485-3227.

cuses for gridlock. no excuses for property tax relief and school finance reform," Profit said.

And even if the Democrats lose their 24-year hold on the state House, Profit isn't concerned about Republicans taking too much advantage of it.

"The Republicans just can't step all over Democrats' interests and expect assistance from the federal government," he said. "As Clinton said in Romulus, we either have to work together or go down together."

Profit said he will continue on with those goals which reflect the needs and desires of his district and the state.

The success of President-elect Bill Clinton will also mean some changes for Gov. John Engler, who strongly supported President George Bush in his re-election bid.

"I think the governor will have to change his direction for Michigan's sake and his own personal political sake," Profit said.

A major loss for the Democrats came in the form of Speaker of the House Lewis Dodak's defeat to Republican challenger Michael Goschka from Brant.

"I relish the thought of defeating the speaker of the House and going to Lansing with an agenda to work on the problems of Michigan," Goschka said. "What goes through my mind is just a big wow. Wow."

The balance of power in the 110-member House hinged on four races whose outcomes were still in doubt Wednesday although all votes were counted.

Lawmakers plan to meet today to elect their leaders. Before Tuesday's election, it was assumed that Dodak would continue as House speaker, a post he's held since 1988.

Control of the House will be determined by a handful of neck-and-neck races, some of which might prompt recounts:

■ Republican John Chmura apparently defeated freshman Rep. Dennis Olshove, D-Warren, by a mere two votes — 20,727 to 20,725.

■ GOP challenger Sandra J. Hill led Rep. Nate Jonker, D-Clio, 19,860 to 19,819 in the 47th District, with all precincts reporting.

■ Incumbent Republican Beverly Bodem led former Dodak aide G.T. Long 21,010 to 20,996, with all precincts reporting.

■ With all votes counted in the 104th District, Republican Michelle McManus had 21,782 votes to 21,521 for Democrat Geraldine Greene.

11 students wounded near 3 Detroit schools

DETROIT (AP) — Eleven teen-agers were wounded Wednesday in separate shootings in and near three Detroit schools, police said. Five of them were hospitalized.

No one had been arrested in the shootings in Finney High School, outside Mumford High School and near the Marcus Garvey Academy, said Officer Rhoda Virgil-Madison, a police spokeswoman.

The shootings at the high schools apparently stemmed from gang disputes, police Inspector Benny Napoleon told WDIV-TV. The motive for the drive-by shootings near Marcus Garvey wasn't immediately determined.

The first of the shootings occurred about 11 a.m. at Finney on the city's east side, police said. Three males entered a locker room, donned ski masks and fired at a group of students, wounding six of them, WDIV said.

One student, Council Bellomy, was admitted to St. John Hospital and was listed in good condition, spokeswoman Carolyn Strongarone said.

About 2:45 p.m., shots were fired at two students as they walked out of Mumford on the west side. A 17-year-old male was shot in the chest and was listed in temporary serious condition at Grace Hospital, Virgil-Madison said.

Napoleon said the second student escaped injury when the bullet struck his wallet.

Meanwhile Wednesday afternoon, two men shot and wounded three males, aged 14, 15 and 16, as they walked past Marcus Garvey, an east-side school for kindergarten through fifth-graders, police Sgt. Richard Nixon said.

The teens were taken to St. John Hospital. Nursing supervisor Tommie Kimball said their injuries weren't life-threatening, but family members asked that their conditions not be given.

Superintendent Deborah McGriff said in a statement that district officials were working with police to investigate the shootings and review school security measures.

"We have received a commitment from the Detroit Police to enhance patrols around all Detroit Public Schools over the next several days, and to increase tactical mobile unit patrols as well," McGriff said. "We are also exploring the possibility of increasing the number of weapons sweeps in our schools."

Detroit youths sold cocaine in Ohio for major drug ring

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — Two of nine people accused of being involved in a major drug operation in Lima have pleaded guilty to drug and weapons charges in a federal court.

Pansie Davis, 21, and April Jones, 24, both of Lima, each pleaded guilty Tuesday to conspiracy to possess and distribute cocaine and unlawful use of a firearm.

Ms. Davis told U.S. District Court Judge John Potter that she helped bring teen-agers from Detroit to Lima to sell cocaine.

Prosecutors said the women were part of a gang known as the Detroit Boys.

Michigan pulls Clinton lever

DETROIT (AP) — Michigan voters turned their anxiety about the economy into votes for Bill Clinton, delivering the Rust Belt state to the Democrats for the first time in 24 years.

With 23 percent of precincts reporting, Clinton had 41 percent, or 404,323 votes. President Bush trailed with 38 percent or 377,780 votes. Independent Ross Perot was third with 21 percent, or 205,498 votes.

Of the four statewide proposals on the ballot, voters were favoring only the term limits measure in early returns. Two proposals on property taxes and one revamping auto insurance were trailing.

Michigan also had open races for five of its 16 U.S. House seats.

Clinton and Bush, viewing Michigan and its 18 electoral votes as pivotal, visited more than a dozen times apiece during the campaign season.

Clinton held a narrow lead in Macomb County, 22,366 to 21,636 with 26 percent of its precincts reporting. The county's blue-collar, white, ethnic voters known as Reagan Democrats crossed party lines for Bush and Ronald Reagan in the previous three presidential elections.

Clinton's margin was bigger in neighboring Oakland County, long regarded a GOP stronghold.

Republicans won the five previous presidential elections in Michigan.

At least five Michigan newcomers to the U.S. House were guaranteed election to the 16 seats left after reapportionment.

Six of the current 18 members announced their retirements because of redistricting, bad checks or the Washington gridlock. A seventh, Rep. Guy Vander Jagt, R-Luther, lost in the primary.

State Sen. Nick Smith, R-Addison, won election to the newly redrawn 7th District in the south central Lower Peninsula. He faced no Democratic opposition and, with 16 percent of the vote counted, led Libertarian Kenneth Proctor, 21,271 to 2,065.

In the 2nd District, Peter Hoekstra — who defeated Vander Jagt in the Republican primary — led Democrat John Miltner, 64,272 to 31,361 with 32 percent of the results available.

In northern Michigan's 1st District, former state Rep. Bart Stupak, a Democrat, had 22,435 votes to 16,874 for Republican Phil Ruppe, a former member of Congress, with 14 percent of precincts reporting.

Other open seats were in the Democratic-leaning 5th District, where Democratic state Sen. James Barcia of Bay City led 29,007 to 13,822 over state Rep. Keith Muxlow, R-Brown City, with 16 percent of precincts reporting; and the heavily Republican 11th District, where GOP insurance agency owner Joseph Knollenberg led 8,517 to 7,675 over Democrat Walter Briggs, an accountant, with 8 percent of the results in.

Two Democratic incumbents jumped to large leads, and two were locked in tight races.

Rep. William Ford, D-Ypsilanti, led GOP state Sen. R. Robert Geake, 35,650 to 22,412 with 25 percent of the vote counted. Rep. Dale Kildee, D-Flint, led Republican Megan O'Neill 13,841 to 6,557 with 17 percent of the vote in.

Rep. Sander Levin, D-Southfield, led Republican John Pappageorge 33,296 to 31,874 with 35 percent of the vote counted in their suburban Detroit district. In the 10th District — the heart of Reagan Democrat country — House Majority Whip David Bonior, D-Mount Clemens, was leading 7,852 to 6,569 for GOP state Sen. Doug Carl of Utica with 7 percent of precincts reporting.

The state's delegation included 11 Democrats and seven Republicans before the election; eight Democrats and three Republicans were running for reelection.

The four statewide ballot proposals included Proposal B, aimed at limiting the terms of top elected officials from U.S. senator down to state House members.

With 25 percent of the vote in, voters were favoring Proposal B by a margin of 580,581 to 404,404, or 59 percent to 41 percent.

Proposal D, drafted by AAA Michigan to revamp auto insurance, was losing 56 percent to 44 percent, or 76,124 votes against and 60,763 in favor, with 5 percent of the votes in.

Proposal D gave voters a chance to cut auto insurance rates by 20 percent a year, saving the average motorist $150.

In exchange, they'd lose unlimited medical coverage for accident injuries and their right to sue would be limited.

100,000,000 strong

A historic mark was passed in Tuesday's election.

By the time the votes were all in, more than 100,000,000 Americans had cast ballots in the presidential race.

That is a new record for the number of ballots cast, and the first time more than 100,000,000 people have voted in a U.S. election.

And Washtenaw County was part of a phenomenon that saw millions of people who had not voted in previous elections turn out to vote.

In some areas, such as Augusta Township, the turnout was over 80 percent, an unheard of level of interest in recent elections.

The results of Tuesday's election will be hashed and rehashed for weeks to come, but one thing was clear: American voters had not permanently lost interest in elections. They turned out in record numbers, especially in places like Augusta Township, where strongly contested local races, coupled with the highly contested presidential race, got everyone's attention.

No matter if people are happy or unhappy with the results of the election, they can take heart in one thing: The American voters did their job this time around. They got out and they cast ballots for the people they wanted to win.

It will be interesting to see whether the high interest in this election will carry over into future elections.

Other opinions

Being productive

Americans' understandable frustration with the current recessionary period has been magnified by the widespread belief that our overall economic condition is heading for a long-term decline. This view is not only untrue, it is dangerous, for it tends to lend unwarranted legitimacy to proposals for radical change that would actually undermine the nation's economic prospects.

Hence, the significance of a recent report by the Washington-based McKinsey Global Institute, which conducted one of the most detailed and sophisticated comparisons of international productivity levels ever undertaken. The importance of the topic is undeniable, for economists agree that productivity — an economy's output per worker in terms of goods and services — is the key to a nation's international competitiveness and its standard of living.

The McKinsey report's conclusion: The United States has a significant lead in productivity over all other major industrial powers, including our chief rivals, Germany and Japan. Translated into dollars of equivalent purchasing power, the average American worker was found to produce $49,600 of goods and services annually, whereas the equivalent figure for German workers was $44,200, and for Japanese workers $38,200.

Breaking down the economy into manufacturing and service sectors, the report found that manufacturing workers in Germany and Japan produce only 80 percent as much as their American counterparts on an hourly basis, and that our productivity margin is even greater in the increasingly important service industries.

As was to be expected, Germany and Japan were able to make great strides in narrowing the productivity gap as they rebuilt their economies following the catastrophic devastation of World War II. But Japan's progress in shrinking our lead slowed down during the 1980s, and Germany actually fell further behind us during that decade.

So much for the mistaken notion that our economy became afflicted with a deadly disease during the Reagan era, and is now virtually moribund. It is particularly interesting to note that this aspect of the conventional wisdom has been found to be untrue by the McKinsey report, since the economists who conducted the study are associated with the Democratic Party.

Actually, observers who have followed this issue have no reason to be surprised by the results of the McKinsey study. For example, another major study comparing manufacturing productivity in the United States, Germany and Japan, reported earlier this year by Edward Wolff of New York University and David Dollar of the World Bank, came to essentially the same conclusions.

What accounts for the American economy's continued status as the world leader in productivity? According to the McKinsey report, our advantage lies in keeping a relatively hands-off policy by the government, compared to the more active role played by government in countries such as Germany and Japan. Our businesses have less governmental protection from competitive pressures domestically and internationally. Instead of hurting our economy, as some claim, that actually helps by forcing us to find ways to be more productive.

So it turns out that deregulation at home and free trade abroad are the keys to maintaining our higher productivity, and that, in turn, will promote a higher standard of living. Government policies aimed at protecting American companies and workers from the rigors of competitive pressure may be superficially appealing in the short-run, but they are counterproductive in the long-run.

Qualified victory

If ever a president should have been poised for re-election, it was George Bush in 1992. But with unfocused, vacillating leadership at home and a limp campaign, the president squandered the Reagan legacy and his own triumph in the Gulf War. By the time he articulated a plan for limited government and an entrepreneurial economy his credibility was fatally damaged. The voters turned away.

Even so, Bill Clinton won with well under half the popular vote.

The first man since Richard Nixon in 1968 to enter the White House with less than a majority, President-elect Clinton received no sweeping mandate. The double-digit showing for eccentric businessman-patriot Ross Perot, who promised to bring straight talk and solvency to Washington, was as much an anti-Clinton as an anti-Bush vote.

There is, then, a shadow over Clinton's victory, sweeping though it was in electoral votes. At his expertly orchestrated nominating convention last July, keynote speaker Barbara Jordan said the challenge of the campaign was to convince the voters to trust the Democrats to govern again. That job evidently isn't quite done.

As he moves to name his cabinet and assemble the legislative package he has promised to present to Congress on taking office, the president-elect should heed Jordan's urgings. To secure public trust, she said, the Democrats must "change from a party with a reputation of tax and spend to one of investment and growth." They must keep faith with the ordinary, hard-pressed middle-class Americans to whom Clinton addressed his campaign, even when doing so means rebuffing entrenched interests that sometimes act as if they own the Democratic party.

President-elect Clinton's long experience in the trenches of state government will stand him in good stead. He knows many of this country's problems up close — and he knows the voters will judge his performance four years hence. As he applies his considerable intelligence and energy to earning the people's ultimate endorsement, we wish him well.

Saving the house that Americans built

By RHETA GRIMSLEY JOHNSON

Q: The defining moment of the 1992 presidential campaign?

A: When a rattled George Bush rose on the balls of his silk stockings to lash out at hecklers, calling them "draft dodgers."

He was wielding once again the broad brush of Cold War politics, the one that divided with fear and hate, that painted all those who would question war as peaceniks and dirty, long-haired hippies. The one that colored an entire race as lazy welfare cheats to curry the votes of another. The one that rewrote the Constitution as an instrument of convenience.

He was, at that moment, the spokesman of a weary mindset that insisted our freedoms were luxuries that could not be afforded in the battle with the perceived enemies of freedom. He was championing the peculiar philosophy that no government is noble, that no government is effective, except a small, unaccountable patriarchy that functions essentially in secret.

He was direct heir of the ill-gotten fortune of the Dixiecrats of 1948, a cadre of well-heeled white men who longed to return to the Good Old Days before the nation knew it had a race problem.

With his two angry words, George Bush revealed himself more clearly than ever before. He was Richard Nixon, staring out the Oval Office window, unable even to understand the protests going on outside. He was Strom Thurmond, fighting for the status quo.

He made a calculated pitch to the worst in us.

Americans, at their best, care about each other. They care about the environment, peace and, of course, prosperity. But our system of government is based upon lofty ideals and bedrock freedoms, of which enterprise is but one.

The last 12 years in particular have been a paean to the buck. There is more to life; there is more to America.

No political party caused the collapse of the Soviet Union. The Communists did not fold their tents because we wagged the biggest guns or the biggest bankroll.

Communism evaporated in the light of a more humane concept of government, reflected off television satellites, which meant the ideas of Jefferson and Paine could not be kept a secret from the world's rank and file.

The ideals we aspire to as a nation are the ones inspiring the welcomed outbreak of freedom around the globe. They want the four basic freedoms, not just the four basic food groups. Sure, others want the fruits of a democratic society — jeans, rock music, a house with a picket fence — but they sometimes seem to understand better than we which is the tail and which is the dog.

We are at our worst when we listen to those appealing to our baser nature, those who claim that a faceless, lazy rabble from within want what we have and will take it from us, that an evil empire from without is so omnipotent that democracy's niceties cannot be afforded.

Only at our worst do we succumb to our fears, prejudices and greed. Only at our worst do we see all dissenters as "draft dodgers."

Americans can be bigger than themselves in a crisis. Boys from Topeka and Tupelo hit the beaches running in Normandy; their wives and girlfriends worked in airplane factories and joked about rationing.

Freedom Riders from Maine and Iowa sweated through dangerous nights in Tougaloo and Selma. In the wake of natural disasters, towns have sent truckloads of relief to San Francisco, Charleston, Managua, the Soviet Union, even Iran.

Americans sense a crisis now. They may not be able to put an elective finger on it, but they are restive. This year they have been asking less "What's in it for me?" and more "What's in it for us?."

Good.

There was much talk in this election about Big Government, as if government were an alien fungus and not the people. There have been threats to close it down, let private concerns take over the roads, the waterways, the parks, the schools. All those things that America has built as a people would be no greater than a hamburger franchise.

The House America Built is bigger than that. It's not a business, but a home.

Economy now is Clinton's assignment

By WALTER R. MEARS

WASHINGTON — Start to finish, it was a single-issue presidential campaign, and the votes that elected Bill Clinton to the White House Tuesday night also carried instructions: Americans want action — soon — to spark the sagging economy.

The overwhelming concern about jobs and the economic future was a problem for President Bush from his first day on the campaign trail. It was the constant in Clinton's campaign; even with detours and distractions, the Democrat always came back to that central topic.

"It's the economy, stupid," read the placard in the campaign conference room at Clinton headquarters in Little Rock, Ark.

Bush and the Republicans tried to change the subject, but the Democrats always changed it back.

"We have been in an extraordinarily difficult period," Bush said as he conceded to Clinton and pledged to get behind the new president.

As the Clinton vote rolled up, GOP leaders said the slump had undone the president.

"People vote their pocketbook," said Sam Skinner, the White House chief of staff Bush replaced in a belated attempt to spur his faltering campaign.

Senate Republican leader Bob Dole, re-elected in Kansas, said Bush was "a victim of the economy, and there are a lot of victims out there, people who have lost their homes and lost their farms and lost their businesses."

Sen. Democratic leader George Mitchell of Maine said Clinton "will hit the ground running, with an aggressive program" and with economic growth his first priority.

An Election Day poll of people who had just voted showed the depth and the impact of those economic concerns. Nearly 80 percent said the economy was not in good shape, and they voted overwhelmingly for Clinton.

Jobs and the economy outranked all other concerns as the issues that mattered most. Add the federal deficit — Ross Perot's big issue — and taxes, and topics related to the economy were the prime concerns of nearly 80 percent.

About two-thirds disapproved of Bush's handling of the economy.

Voters had other concerns, of course, but the slump, above all, dogged the president's re-election bid. His approval ratings from post-Persian Gulf War highs slumped with the economy.

Indeed, Bush may have written his troubled campaign script well in advance, when he opted against action, even proposals, to stimulate the economy. He had the post-war standing to push an ambitious program on Congress in the spring of 1991, but all he pushed were his crime and transportation bills.

By fall, with the campaign at hand, some Republicans were restless, pushing for a new economic program, even a special session of Congress. Bush said no, relying on advisors who said an upturn was just ahead.

They were wrong. The economy stayed sluggish, and the Democrats stayed on the case. On his first campaign mission, Bush went to New Hampshire to tell voters he cared about their lost jobs and incomes, and could do something about it. The words varied and the plans were repackaged, but in essence, he was still trying on election eve to convince voters he cared.

He also tried to persuade them that Clinton couldn't be trusted, and the Democrat would raise taxes, hike spending and worsen the economic situation, and that they needed an experienced hand on duty in case of crisis.

The survey indicated that Clinton's classic outsider theme, time for a change, had more influence than any of those GOP talking points. In talking of change the Democrats concentrated, again, on the economy.

Next year, in a Democratic White House, that message will be a commitment. Bush tried to blame inaction on the Democratic Congress. With one party in full control, that will not apply, and the voters are going to expect answers, no excuses.

"There'll be no more gridlock," Dole said. "It's up to them to produce."

That will be Clinton's first big challenge, and he knows it. His people already have been at work on answers, and that will intensify now, in the weeks before Inauguration Day, Jan. 20.

Well before Election Day, his organization had a team of volunteer economists at work on a plan, including a jobs program and an investment tax credit to boost small business, with standby plans if needed.

In addition, Clinton's team planned an immediate state-by-state inventory of highway and other public works projects that are ready to go but shelved for lack of funds and could be launched quickly by a Democratic administration.

With the voting done, the economic revival that would create jobs and boost incomes is no longer an issue. It's an assignment.

Upbeat Perot stalwarts vow to continue crusade

By LISA HOFFMAN
Scripps Howard News Service

DALLAS — Nine new volunteers had lined up before the doors opened Wednesday morning at Ross Perot's headquarters.

Callers from all across America were on hold, waiting to register their thanks and to find out what they could do to keep the movement alive.

Donated dollars filled a plastic bucket.

As long-time volunteer Joe Billo, a Dallas sign company owner who joined the draft-Perot movement last spring, put it, "This isn't the day after, it's the start of the beginning."

Like Billo, those who migrated to Perot headquarters fought off their regret and disappointment at his third-place finish Tuesday with the conviction that theirs was a cause that would endure.

Orson Swindle, Perot's campaign manager, said work had begun already to turn Perot's "United We Stand, America" organization into a permanent force for political change. On the agenda: establishing chapters in all 50 states; setting up a membership dues structure to provide financing; and establishing the group as self-sustaining operation.

Swindle said he didn't know what Perot's role might be, aside from that of "spiritual leader." For the time being, Swindle said he would be in charge.

The phone banks, a hallmark of Perot's unorthodox campaign, will remain in operation for at least another month, he said.

In his concession speech Tuesday night, Perot promised his followers that "we'll keep on going as long as you want to keep on going."

Later, his son, Ross Jr., forecast an "ad hoc" role for his father on the national scene. He said his father would enjoy taking on a tough issue and spearheading an effort to solve it.

Perot volunteer Peter Kampas, for one, wouldn't fault Perot if he faded from the limelight. "He's done his duty," said Kampas, a microwave communications company executive. "Now it's up to the rest of us."

Women's agenda to focus on families

WASHINGTON (AP) — With an unprecedented victory behind them, Democratic women and their supporters promised Wednesday to push a congressional agenda expected to include health care, education and workplace reform.

"You are going to see a coalition of women that will get to work from day one to get this country back on track," said Patty Murray, one of four women who captured seats in the Senate in Tuesday's election.

The victories by state legislator Murray in Washington, former San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein and Rep. Barbara Boxer in California and Carol Moseley Braun in Illinois mean there will be six women in the Senate.

"That's a big change in a body that is as stolid, sometimes as unmovable, as the United States Senate," Feinstein said today. "You will see women work together and work for change in a way which is unparalleled," she predicted on NBC's "Today" show.

"The women who won share a vision of the future together," Boxer said on the same program. "New priorities, domestic agenda, really having a pro-family America. There is a kinship. I think you'll see us move together," she said.

There are now a record three women in the Senate — Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., re-elected Tuesday; Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., not on the ballot again until 1996; and Jocelyn Burdick, D-N.D., filling in temporarily for her late husband.

Women also made substantial gains in the House, with nearly complete unofficial returns showing 24 new female representatives elected. Most of these victors, like all four of the senators-elect, are Democrats.

Blacks, Hispanics, Asian-Americans and American Indians also made historic gains in the congressional voting.

Blacks took advantage of district lines redrawn under a strengthened Voting Rights Act to capture their first House seats since the 1800s in Alabama, Florida, Virginia and North and South Carolina.

Their victories, along with those of others elected Tuesday, bring the number of blacks in the House to 38 — a gain of 13.

Braun, the Cook County (Chicago) recorder of deeds, is the first black woman ever elected to the Senate, which has not had any black members at all since Sen. Edward Brooke, R-Mass., left office in 1979.

Hispanic winners included Nydia Velazquez of New York, who will be the first Puerto Rican woman in Congress, and members-elect from California, Florida, Illinois, New Jersey and Texas.

Asian-Americans won at least five of the record eight seats they contested for the Senate and House. Two lost and one race was too close to call. In complete unofficial returns in California's 43rd district, Democrat Mark Takano led Republican Ken Calvert by 234 votes in a total of more than 166,000. California Republican Jay Kim became the first Korean-born American elected to the House.

In Colorado, Democratic Rep. Ben Nighthorse Campbell became the first American Indian to win election to the Senate in more than half a century. Wisconsin's Ada Deer, however, failed in her bid to become the first American Indian woman in Congress.

Annual Financial Report

TO THE CITIZENS OF THE LINCOLN SCHOOL DISTRICT

The audited financial statements for the Lincoln School District for the year ending June 30, 1992 are herewith presented as required by law.

The available school facilities in 1991-92 consisted of five permanant school buildings and ten portable classrooms in addition to garage and service facilities.

Three thousand two hundred and thirty eight (3,238) students in grades K-12 were served along with sixty-nine (69) children in preschool program. An additional eighty-one (81) part-time students were served in our Adult Education Department. Employees numbered 333 of which 182 were instructional staff, 11 were administrative, and 140 were employed as support personal. The pupil to teacher ratio was 19-1.

The millage levy for 1991-92 was 39.2793 mills for operation and 4.70 mills for debt.

The district uses accounting procedures as established by law and has its books audited annually.

Bush returns to turn out lights

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush came home to begin turning the lights out on 12 years of Republican rule Wednesday, vowing to "finish this job with style."

He promised to help ease President-elect Clinton's transition but had little else in the way of specific plans for the 77 days left in his presidency.

Aides suggested that a once-planned trip to Moscow seemed to be off and that there seemed to be little that Bush could do, or that is expected of him, between now and Jan. 20 — other than minding the store.

One thing he did do, flying back to Washington, was to veto the $27 billion urban aid and tax bill. His veto message said the bill "includes numerous tax increases, violates fiscal discipline and would destroy jobs and undermine small business."

President Bush waves to a crowd from the Truman Balcony after returning to the White House Wednesday with first lady Barbara Bush.

Bush was greeted by several hundred White House employees, Republican members of Congress, Cabinet members and loyalists at an arrival ceremony on the South Lawn of the White House.

'Maybe you didn't read the election returns. It didn't work out quite the way we wanted," Bush joked to cheers from the crowd.

"I can think of nothing other to say than let's finish this job with style," Bush said. "Let's get the job done, cooperate fully with the new administration.

"The government goes on, as well it should. And we will support the new president and give him every chance to lead this country to greater heights," Bush said.

"I am very grateful," Bush said. "It's been a wonderful four years and nobody can take that away from any of us. ... I think we've really contributed something to the country and maybe history will record it that way."

Tears were plentiful among the crowd, as were discussions of future reunions and job searches.

The last incumbent turned out of office was Democrat Jimmy Carter. As a lame-duck, he wrestled with the Iran hostage crisis until it was time to head for the U.S. Capitol and Ronald Reagan's inauguration in January 1981.

There is no similar foreign crisis brewing as Bush closes out the Reagan-Bush era, and his flexibility to act on the domestic front is severely limited by political realities.

Bush planned to go to the presidential retreat at Camp David, Md., through the weekend. A vacation trip the following week seemed likely, although a destination remained unclear.

Beyond that, there seemed to be no clear plans.

The president himself told teary-eyed supporters on Tuesday night that he planned to "get very active in the grandchild business."

Bush fought back tears as he boarded Air Force One in Houston on a rainy, raw morning, hugging a few close friends who had come out to Ellington Air Base to see him off.

Behind a fence, about three dozen well wishers watched silently.

Bush seemed not to even notice the group until he was boarding his plane, when he turned and gave a small wave.

A day after the president lost an electoral landslide to Clinton, his team was dispersing.

James A. Baker III, who quit his job as secretary of state last summer to be Bush's chief of staff and to oversee a failed political rescue mission, stayed in Houston.

Appearing in the garage of Bush's hotel in a khaki shirt and jeans, Baker told reporters, "My immediate plans are to go my south Texas ranch and start shooting birds."

Gesturing with this arms, he lifted an imaginary shotgun to a firing position. Baker said he was going to relax on his ranch for at least four or five days.

Bush's campaign chairman, Bob Teeter, said he was returning to Michigan, probably to get back into the political consulting business. Teeter did little to disguise his mood, saying he was "tired and down. It's tough to lose."

Teeter said new allegations against Bush in the Iran-Contra affair that surfaced Friday stopped Bush's comeback in the polls. But, Teeter said, "I'm not saying we would have won. ..."

His voice trailed off. He said he didn't see too much point in "picking over the bones."

Most Bush aides blamed the president's defeat on the sour economy.
